In praise of indie food stores

A tradition of small-scale food marketing with an emphasis on local ownership and products. Some are located on farms—extensions of the farmstead that add the option of sit-down or take-out dining. Many feature foods produced or processed on-site. Two—Quabbin Harvest Coop in Orange and the current iteration of the Petersham Country Store—have partnered with area land trusts who have purchased historic properties in town centers as a way to help strengthen local food systems. These independently-owned stores—and others in the area less centrally focused on local food—serve system popularized by A&P and other chains, and make selections from open shelves rather than waiting for clerks to fetch their orders as had long been the custom. Many small stores used the cost-saving self-service system promoted “to give efficient and friendly service to the consumer. As chain groceries began to gain market share in the first decades of the 20th century, independents found ways to stay competitive. Red & White was a wholesaler founded in 1921 that offered store brands to “mom and pop” businesses at prices that could match the chains. An attention shopper at the Petersham Country Store today may notice a framed, typed letter on a shelf next to one of the coolers. Written by the Hutchinsors to their new customers in 1946, it promised “to give efficient and friendly service to the people of Petersham and to retain our merchandise to you at the prevailing price levels.”

Friendliness, efficiency, and affordability are goals that small food stores in our area and far beyond still strive to meet. In this edition of Food from the North Quabbin, we highlight some of the businesses that carry on this tradition.

WHAT'S LOCAL?

In praise of indie food stores
An antique cash register sits on a shelf in the back room of the Petersham Country Store. Found in the basement during the store’s renovation and reopening in 2014, it tells a story of a previous transition and the long struggle of small, independently-owned food stores to compete in a market increasingly dominated by giants.

The store in the Creek revival building in the town center had already been in business for more than a century when Henry Goodsell, who operated it through the difficult Depression years, sold it to Pauline and Edward Hutchinson in 1944. The Hutchinsors embarked on a modernization of the old store, adding the refurbished 1920-year old cash register as well as shopping carts so customers could make selections from open shelves rather than waiting for clerks to fetch their orders as had long been the custom.
